

FACT Act Disclosure

The Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003 was signed into law by President Bush on December 4, 2003. This law, which went into effect on December 1, 2004, made significant changes and additions to the Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act. The FACT Act enhances the ability of consumers to combat identity theft, increases the accuracy of consumer reports, and allows consumers to exercise greater control regarding the type and amount of marketing solicitations they receive. The FACT Act provides for free annual credit reports, increases the standard for the accuracy of the information furnished to credit reporting agencies, strengthens adverse action notices, and creates a right to a credit score from a credit reporting agency for a reasonable fee. The FACT Act also requires a lender or broker who is considering a home loan application to provide a credit score without a fee and adds certain rights for identity theft victims and measures intended to prevent identity theft, including a duty on creditors to take certain steps before granting credit when a fraud alert is contained in a credit file or accompanies a credit score.

Section 217 of the FACT Act requires that if any financial institution (1) extends credit and regularly and in the ordinary course of business furnishes information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency, and (2) furnishes negative information to such an agency regarding credit extended to a member, the institution must provide in writing, a clear and conspicuous notice about furnishing negative information to the member. This written notice must be provided to the member prior to or not later than 30 days after furnishing the negative information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency.
